SPELLING.

Monosyllables ending in f, l or s double the final letter; others do not. Examples:—bell, log.

Exceptions:—Clef, if, of, sol, as, gas, has, was, yes, thus, is, his, us, fus.

Add, burr, buzz, butt, egg, ebb, err, fizz, fuzz, inn, odd.

As a rule, monosyllables ending in c hard add k, as lack. A few exceptions occur.

A monosyllable or a word that has the accent on the last syllable, ending in a single consonant preceded by a single vowel doubles the final letter when adding a suffix beginning with a vowel; fit, fitted. X is never doubled. If the final consonant is not preceded by a single vowel or if the accent is not on the last syllable the final letter is not doubled; as, —travel, traveler.

When silent e ends a word, drop the e when a suffix beginning with a vowel is added;—have, having. Retain the e before ous, able and ably to preserve the soft sound of c and g and in a few cases to prevent doubt as to the pronunciation;—peace, peaceable, hoeing. Do not drop the e before a suffix beginning with a consonant. Exc.—judgment, etc.

The diphthong ei usually follows c; ie usually after other consonants;—receive, belief. Whether to use ei or ie may be determined readily by the nearness of the first vowel to the preceding consonant in the alphabet. In receive the e is nearest to c in the alphabet so use it; in belief the i is nearest to l so use it. Seize and other exceptions can readily be remembered.

Final y following a consonant is usually changed to i before a suffix;—holy, holiness. Adding ing drops the final e and changes i to y;—die, dying. Note the spelling, —try, trying.

Compound words usually retain the spelling of the original parts. There are a number of exceptions to this rule;—always, welcome, etc.

To spell well train the eye as well as the ear. Write and rewrite in correct way words you commonly misspell till their form is fixed in your mind.

THE USE OF CAPITALS.

Use a capital letter,

1. For the first word of every sentence.
2. For the first word after an introductory or set term as in the case of laws and resolutions; Resolved, That—. Each line of a statement or bill of particulars may begin with a capital letter.
3. For the first word of an answer to a question.
4. To begin proper names of persons, places, months, days, ships, etc. Also for titles of honor and distinction.
5. For the pronoun I and the interjection O.
6. For the first word of every line of poetry.
7. For all the names by which God and Christ are known. Words referring to the Deity should usually be capitalized. If a title is expressed the pronoun referring to it in the same sentence need not have a capital.
8. For all adjectives which are derived from proper names, names of races and nations; as, American, Cuban, Russian.
9. For the first word of a quotation introduced after a colon.
10. For common nouns when personified; as, The Oak said to the Ash, etc.
11. To begin words and phrases that are used as names of particular objects.
12. For each important word in headings, subjects of papers, titles of books, heads of chapters, names of orders, and expressions of special importance.

ITALICS, SMALL CAPS, ETC.

In manuscript draw one line under words or parts that you want printed in italics; two lines for SMALL CAPITALS; three lines for LARGE CAPITALS. You may also indicate in writing any special type or characters you want used to bring out certain words or parts.

Use italics to mark emphatic words, phrases and clauses. Degrees of emphasis may be indicated by the size of type used; as, yes, YES, YES! Words from foreign languages should be printed in italics. Special names of books, newspapers, magazines, and definite objects are frequently printed in italics or small capitals. The name of an author of a quotation or cited article is usually placed after the quotation and printed in italics.

Do not crowd the page with capitals, punctuation marks and special characters. In these matters consult your printer.

PUNCTUATION.

Marks of punctuation are used to separate words and groups of words in any composition for the purpose of making the meaning intended by the writer clear to the reader. Keep this in mind and it will help you in determining the marks to be used.

The Period (.) indicates the greatest degree of separation and marks the completion of a thought. Use it at the end of all declarative and imperative sentences. A sentence is but a thought expressed in words and when that is stated the period is used. It is also used after all abbreviations (B. A., P. M., etc.) and as a mark between dollars and cents ($100.41).

The Colon (:) denotes the second greatest degree of separation and is used between the great, equal parts of a compound sentence, the members themselves being separated into parts by half degrees or semi-colons (;). The colon is also used before a long quotation or enumeration that is formally introduced and before a statement that sets forth in a sentence the same idea a second time.

The Semicolon (;) is used when there is less break in the thought than the colon denotes. It is used before as, namely, to-wit, etc., when they introduce examples or illustrations; between the parts of sentences when the connectives are omitted or when the parts are long; between clauses that follow each other but have a common dependence, and wherever the use of a number of commas or the need of explanation requires a mark indicating greater separation in order to save from confusion and to plainly set forth the thought of the sentence.

The Comma (,) denotes the least degree of separation. It is used before and after parenthetical expressions that are out of their natural order and connection; after each pair of words when used in pairs; between words or phrases when the connectives are omitted; after a clause that is itself a subject; after adjective, participial, appositive, independent and antithetical phrases; before and after a direct quotation or a quotation introduced by that; after words that are repeated merely for emphasis; separates contrasted words and phrases; takes the place of verbs to save repeating and is used in all cases where ambiguity would arise if it were not used.

This series of four marks covers practically all cases that require division of the sentence for the purpose stated. A careful study of sentences involving the various points will well repay study and will enable a writer to effectively use these marks.

The Interrogation Point (?) is used at the end of a sentence that asks a question. If the question is broken up into a number of parts or if there are several successive questions in the same sentence and yet all can be answered by one and the same statement, but one mark is used and that is placed at the end. A series of questions, however, that are on the same subject but disconnected even if related in sense, must each have its own mark.

The Exclamation Point (!) is used after exclamatory expressions indicating emotion. In closely connected exclamatory expressions do not use it immediately after the interjection but at the end of the expression.

The Dash (—) is used to indicate a sudden break or turn in the thought; to take the place of omitted letters, figures and phrases, and sometimes before words repeated for emphasis.

The Curves () include expressions that have no necessary connection with the sentence in which they are found and which can be omitted without destroying the sentence. The matter within the curves is called a parenthesis or parenthetical expression. The curves are frequently used to inclose letters, figures or signs used for explanation, headings or divisions of matter.

The punctuation of parenthetical expressions depends upon their use, position and relation to the sentence of which they are made a part. Use no marks before or after if none are needed in the sentence itself. When a comma is necessary it is better to place it after the last curve. If the parenthesis expresses emotion or is an inquiry, its own mark (? or !) would be used within the curves and the comma would then be thrown before the curves, but as a rule no point should be used before the first curve if not required by the sentence without the parenthesis. Curves make composition look bad, so omit them when expressions are short and use commas instead.

The Brackets [] are used to enclose words, expressions and characters that explain some preceding part or that have been inserted by authors or translators.

The Apostrophe (') denotes an omission of a letter or letters.

The Hyphen (-) connects the parts of compound words, divides words into syllables and is used at the end of a line where a part of the word runs over to the next line.

Quotation Marks (" ") enclose words quoted by one author from the book of another or words spoken by persons in the narrative.

The Index (☞) points to a passage to which attention is particularly requested.

The Brace () connects a number of items under one head.

The Caret (^) shows that words that are omitted are to be inserted at point indicated.

The Macron (¯) indicates a long sound.

The Breve (˘) indicates a short sound.

The Dieresis (¨) is placed over the second of two vowels and shows that they are to be pronounced separately.

The Tilde (~) over n adds to it the y sound; as, cañon, kan-yon.
